What Font is That!!!

Nowdays there are literally thousands of fonts available to the computer user, making it more and more difficult to identify a particular font being used. In fact, in this bulletin alone you will find seven different fonts, which of course to the purists is a definite breaking of the typesetting rules. The rule is that you should restrict any publication to a maximum of three fonts. Two fonts have been used for the body text in this edition of the Bulletin, Swis 721 BT and Gill Sans MT.

This article is set in Gill Sans. It has for many years been a very popular font amongst designers and typesetters. It is also a much older font than most people think. It was originally designed by Eric Gill. Eric studied under Edward Johnson, who was a renowned calligrapher, and in 1928 produced the Monotype series 231, a sans serif typeface that was the forerunner of the extensive Gill Sans font family of today.

The lighter Gill Sans fonts are perfect for magazine and book work as they are highly readable, whereas the heavier weights are great for display work such as advertising and packaging.
