Talking Fonts!

What's the difference between a serif font and a sans serif font?

According to the Webopedia, which claims to be the number one online encyclopedia dedicated to computer technology, a sans serif, which is pronounced SAN-SERR-if, is a category of typefaces that do not use serifs, which are small lines at the end of characters. Gill Sans is an example of a sans serif font. We need to remember that if the word 'serif' is preceded by 'sans' it means NO SERIFS.

Other sans serif fonts include Helvetica, Avante Garde, Swis, Switzerland and Arial, most of which are supplied with Draw.

Common serif fonts, and remember these ones DO have the serifs, as in Times Roman, include Courier New, Palatino, Rockwell, New Century Schoolbook and Goudy Oldstyle amongst many others.

Sans Serif fonts are generally seen as being more difficult to read, so are usually used as headlines, captions or short pieces of text. Usually a serif font is used for large amounts of text, as you see in your daily newspaper or any other large printed articles.
